BOOK EXCERPT

When you hear someone say the word average, what comes to mind? Do you envision someone settling for less? Is it someone who does just enough to get by? Could it be that you're the one settling for an average life that you don't care for? Do you feel that the things in your life are average or that something is missing? Do you lack the ambition or drive to do the work that you currently are doing daily, feeling unmotivated to pursue your passion?

If you, or someone you know, are waking up dreading the day without any excitement to create and seize opportunity, then you might be held down by what is called the force of average. I don't think anybody goes about looking to be average in what they do. Could you imagine if that was someone's goal every day? To go out into the world and underachieve at everything they come across. Believe it or not, many people are like the elephant tied to the spike that I mentioned earlier.

At some point in our life, we all have been faced with the force of average. We become content with doing average work while others are achieving the things they want out of life, or the things we want out of life. It may seem as though happy and successful people always make the right decisions to get all the breaks in life. Successful people are so damn lucky to be alive! We tell ourselves that we can't have the same luck as them because it's just not meant for us. We might tell ourselves that we're not smart enough, or we lack the talent to be a success in our life.
